A Spicy Postmaster,

There is in the State of Nebraska a post office established at an "aromatic" point named Pepperville. The name is sugges tive of something above the ordinary degree of warmth, and to fill the position of presiding genius required the host to be equally fiery as the location named. -Several applicants have already submitted claims before the department pay the position, among whom was one bearing the singular cognomen of Strong Pepper,-This named applicant had certainly a recommendation in his name, if not his supporters, and was on Tuesday commissioned to preside as postmaster over the aforesaid village of Pepperville. If Strong Pepper is not capable of collecting and distributing the mails in Pepperville, who has a stronger claim to the position?

Great complaints are made in most parts of the parish of the smallness and backwardness of the cane. A few planters will make as much sugar to the hand as they made last year, some as high as ten hogsheads and even more, but many who expected to make heavy crops will hardly pay expenses. The scarcity of hands on the large plantations is a serious drawback to their crops and their success. Many were unable to lay by their crops in a condition that would secure more than half the yield that good cultivation would have secured .-- Planters' Banner, 18th.
